Chapter 1 by Tailors <3

The man behind the counter shuffled and dealt the cards. There were 4 players. One was an old retired man whose wallet created a large bulge in his pocket. Another was a young boy who looked as if he hadn't a care, or a dollar, in the world. Next there was an elderly woman who was dressed as if she had unlimited money. Finally there was a young woman who's face was smiling and her eyes were bright, she had nothing to loose. So now as the Joker dealt the players their cards all eyes were on the 4 remaining players of the annual 'Live or Loose' game.

The Joker smiled and dealt out the second round of cards. Once he'd done that he began to speak: "Okay players! Welcome to the final round! Remember; the player with the highest score wins it all! Could the players please place their fortunes and the audience make their bets!" The 4 players all laid out their money in front of the Joker. Even though the young boy only laid out 50 dollars the grand total was 4 million. One player would be going home that night with 4 million dollars. This was a game of chance.

The crowd placed their bets, most betting for the rich old man and the over-dressed elderly woman. The bets were placed with 200 thousand dollars on the elderly woman and only 5 dollars on the young boy. The players flipped their cards and the Joker added up the total. "The winner... is Marc Frexlin!" The young man's mouth formed a perfect 'O'. The Joker smiled slyly at him and the young boy. "He said,
